

Dad tucks the blanket tight around her, the way she likes — snug like an envelope. The window is a small dark square, and in the corner of it, Jupiter is still there. Still shining. Still traveling.
Still close.

