

She stood very still and looked up. The sky was bigger than anything. It went up and up and up, past the tops of the trees, past the slow drifting clouds, all the way to where the stars began — and the stars went up and up too, forever.