

She turned the page slowly, one finger marking her place. The story was quiet today. The rug was warm under her knees. Outside the window, the afternoon was going on without her, and she did not mind a bit.